B. Identify the workshop you are interested in delivering:

- Addressing Anti-Black Racism English

This three-part series of workshops explores the systemic nature of Anti-Black racism within our society, requiring both unlearning and learning. To address Anti-Black racism, we need to define it, acknowledge it, and be aware of its origins. The second workshop traces a Canadian history, delves into understanding of key concepts, and ends with practical, moving-forward, steps including case-study analysis. The last workshop in the three-part series builds on prior learning, transitions to commitment and challenges participants to evaluate and plan how to integrate addressing Anti-Black racism practices into their personal and professional lives.

C. Expertise – Please list below examples of any relevant training and demonstrated knowledge of the subject matter.
